Uniform winter gear approved
Wolf Pack members are authorized wear of battle dress uniform cold-weather undergarments including thermal underwear, sleep shirts, brown sweaters and black turtlenecks.

Tax forms available online soon
Beginning in January, the 2002 W2 tax forms will be available online through Defense Finance and Accounting Service's myPay system. Service members and civilian employees can go to <http://www.dfas.mil/>, and click on myPay, under the "Money Matters" heading for more information.

Pacific, Indian soldiers train
The Army's only airborne fighting force in the Pacific region made history earlier this month with an ally from the war on terrorism. U.S. Army Alaska's 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment welcomed 80 soldiers from the 50th Independent Parachute Brigade of India to exercise Geronimo Thrust in the first-ever training exchange between the two countries.

Officer assignments change
A better chance for officers and commanders to align assignments with deployments and family needs are two benefits of a new three-cycle officer assignment calendar beginning with moves in summer 2003, said personnel officials. The change — a decrease from four 'cycles' per year — eliminates the overlap in cycles and "deconflicts" assignments with air and space expeditionary force deployments.

'myPay' provides finance online
A program designed to help Air Force people manage their pay more easily went online Oct. 15. myPay offers improved online services for active-duty, Guard and Reserve airmen, civilian employees, retirees and beneficiaries. Among the many features available are the abilities to view, print and save leave and earning statements; change federal and state tax withholdings; update bank account and electronic funds transfer information; edit address information; and control Thrift Savings Plan enrollment.

Iraq, N. Korea: Not identical situations

Powell, Rice discuss why American concerns about these countries are 'quite different'

By Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — American concerns about Iraq and North Korea are "quite different" and will be dealt with individually, two senior Bush administration officials said Oct. 20.

Officials announced last week that North Korea has admitted to developing nuclear weapons, a direct violation of at least four international agreements and treaties. Iraq has been flouting international sanctions and agreements for more than a decade.

National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice warned against "cookie cutter foreign policy" on the CBS news program "Face the Nation." It would be a mistake for the international community to respond to the circumstances surrounding the two rogue nations in the same manner, she said.

"The cases are both very dangerous, and we're concerned about both," she said.

She detailed how Iraq has thrown out U.N. weapons inspectors, invaded neighboring countries, and used weapons of mass destruction against its own people. "Iraq is in a class by itself," Rice said.

The difference in the two countries' economic situations means diplomacy still has a chance in North Korea, she said. Iraq's Saddam Hussein has oil revenues to bankroll his programs, while North Korea is in dire financial straits.

North Korea's economic situation can be used as a "lever" to achieve concessions from that country, Secretary of State Colin Powell said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"[North Korea] is a lot stronger militarily," he said, "but it is sitting on a very rotten base with respect to its economy."

Powell described North Korea as a "starving country with a broken economy, a broken society." He said the United States would be working with the international community to put "maximum pressure on North Korea to make the point to them that this is totally inconsistent with trying to improve the lives of [the North Korean] people."

Powell also spoke on Iraq, saying the Bush administration is more concerned about disarmament than the demise of Saddam Hussein's regime.

"All we are interested in is getting rid of those weapons of mass destruction,"

Secretary of State Colin Powell

he said. "We think the Iraqi people would be a lot better off with a different leader, ... but the principal offense here [is the threat of] weapons of mass destruction."

Powell said he is confident the U.N. Security Council will consider a resolution on action against Iraq by "early this week."

He said the resolution must document three things: that Hussein has been in violation of previous U.N. resolutions

Leadership

Are you taking care of your people?

By Lt. Col. Cheryl Gregorio
8th Medical Operations Support Squadron

We've all heard the phrase "Take care of your people," but what does that really mean and how do I do that as a supervisor or leader? There's no standard answer, but there are some things you can do that go a long way to motivating people and making sure you take care of them.

The number one complaint in organizations with problems is people are not recognized for the work they do. This is not exclusive to the military, it's rampant in the civilian world as well. This means the low hanging fruit could be defined as recognizing your people for what they do. "How do I do that?" you might ask.

We have two ways of doing that in today's Air Force. One is formal and pretty easy. The other is more informal and not so easy, but has an even greater impact.

Let's start with the formal method. — EPRs, OPRs and decorations. The key to this method is being on time and turning in a quality product. It's part of leadership to know when someone's EPR/OPR or decoration is due.

We have all heard "It's the individual's responsibility," but it's the supervisor's responsibility to make sure performance reports are done on time and correctly. Here at the Wolf Pack we have a built-in advantage; we know before the member arrives when their stuff is due. There's no excuse for late evaluations or decorations because we already know the timing. Just because we all get a mid-tour doesn't mean we can't do our reports on time. It's really a done deal before the member gets here.

The other key component of the formal method is the quality of the write-up. It doesn't matter if it's an evaluation, a decoration or a quarterly award. The facts are usually enough. Just make sure you include everything significant.

Fluff is obvious to everyone. So turn it in on time and dazzle them with the truth. It's really easy to write a report if you keep it simple and stay away from the fluff.

Now that we have the report out of the way, how do we make sure everyone else knows how well your people are doing their job? We give them public recognition! Decorations are an easy way to publicly recognize our people. They were meant to be given in front of God and everybody. We want everyone to know that if you do a great job you will be praised and there will be thunderous adulation.

Put it in distro? Foul! You want people to figure out that you have no idea how to take care of them? This story will get around at the speed of heat.

The formal public recognition is the easy part because it's all laid out for you. The hard part is just saying thank you. But it really isn't hard at all.

A simple "thank you" can make all the difference.

It lets them know you appreciate everything they do, even if you don't exactly know what they do.

Simple is best. Saying "thanks for helping me today" is one of my favorites. I don't just say it for showing up, but for actually doing a good job. Remember, no one tries to do a bad job. They want to get it done and done right. So let them know when they did it right.

They'll be even more motivated the next time.

Now that you know what to do, where do you do it? You have to get out to the shops! How else are you going to know what to thank your people for if you have no idea what they do? You don't have to be the expert in their job; you just have to know how it contributes — and not just to the squadron or group, but to the wing and the overall Air Force mission.

You, as the boss, can't know that unless you go to them. It's easy to camp out in your office, but anybody can do that. You want to be a good leader? Get out there and tell them how they contribute. Make them a part of the "big picture."

So, taking care of people has many facets but the high impact methods are pretty straightforward.

Get their EPRs/OPRs in on time and right, formally recognize them in public, informally recognize them in front of their co-workers and go see what they do.

This is what they deserve and this is what you owe them.

"Saying a simple thank you can make all the difference. It lets them know that you appreciate everything they do, even if you don't exactly know what they do."

Ask Ms. Song

Q: Why is it sometimes very smokey on the base?

A: After the rice from surrounding farms is harvested, the stalks are burned to prepare the fields for next season. Up until the 1960s and 1970s, the stalks were used for various uses, but a lack of manpower led to rice being harvested by machines. The rice burning usually goes on for about two weeks here.

Q: How do you say hello in Korean?

A: When speaking to someone in person, you'd say, "On-yo-ha-say-oh." When speaking to someone on the phone, you'd say, "Yo-bah-say-oh."

AF training saves life at gym

By 1st Lt. Heather Healy
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

A member of the 8th Services Squadron recently used his Air Force-trained self-aid buddy care skills to save the life of a military dependent.

Tech. Sgt. Charles Marshall, fitness center director, prevented Unhis Garlitos, wife of Staff Sgt. Christopher Garlitos, 8th Civil Engineering Squadron, from choking to death, earning him an Air Force Achievement Medal.

"After I exercised, I drank some water," said Garlitos. "I don't know what happened. I just started to choke."

Fortunately Marshall and a coworker were working nearby and came to the rescue.

"We heard a gasping sound coming from the women's locker room," said Marshall. "We stood up and started to investigate. Mrs. Garlitos came stumbling out, and she was giving us the sign for choking."

Marshall told a co-worker to call 911. He then spun Garlitos around and performed the Heimlich maneuver on her.

"I was very scared and I couldn't breathe. I was really thankful he helped me," said Garlitos.

Whatever had been caught in Garlitos's throat was dislodged by the action. Though shaken and scared, Garlitos was healthy and fully capable of returning to her normal activities.

Marshall's seemingly once in a lifetime moment of heroism, however, wasn't once in a lifetime at all. Fifteen years ago while stationed at Minot Air Force Base, N.D., he was working in the dining hall when a customer began to choke.

"There was no hoopla made about it though. A guy was choking on some food in the dining hall. I gave him the Heimlich maneuver, and he was fine," Marshall said.

in high school, gives repetitive Air Force training credit for his ability to think clear in tough situations.

"With the Air Force always having us involved in self-aid buddy care, we're always trained to render some kind of first aid care to someone," Marshall said.

Community wins PACAF award

By Airman 1st Class Andrew Svoboda
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

The Falcon Community Center here recently received the award for best community center in Pacific Air Forces for the fifth consecutive year.

The center strives to give back to the community, offering fun and recreation for the Wolf Pack, said Tech. Sgt. Carolyn Bond, 8th Services Squadron community center director.

"We plan weekly, monthly and annual activities," said Bond of the 24-hour operated community center. "Basically, we don't want anyone to be able to say there's nothing to do here at Kunsan."

Kunsan and Osan are the only two Air Force bases that employ military members in the community center, although 14 of the community center's 16-person staff is civilian. Yi, In Nam, a 30-year member of the Wolf Pack, has greatly contributed to this year's success, as well as adding the continuity necessary for providing good events every year, said Bond.

Activities organized by the community center staff include cultural trips, DMZ tours and concerts. During the past year, the Dallas Cowboy cheerleaders, country music artist Chely Wright and more recently Charlie Daniels visited Kunsan.

"These are big projects that receive base-wide attention and require lots of logistical planning," said Bond. "Many times we must rely on the support of volunteers, as our operation is so small."

In addition to major events, the community center holds weekly tournaments, such as pool, spades and basketball in addition to weekly karaoke nights. This all takes place in addition to being the base's one-stop ticket and information center, which also offers movie rentals and phone card sales.

The past year was a successful one for the community center staff and they are looking forward to continuing the tradition in the future.

"We've got more great events planned for this year," said Bond. "Tops in Blue, a base talent show and a Christmas bazaar are just of a few of the upcoming events we have in store for the Wolf Pack."

Officials: Terror attacks planned

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The terrorist threat today is as great as it was in the weeks before the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, CIA Director George Tenet told Congress Oct. 17.

Tenet told the Joint Committee on Intelligence that al Qaeda has reconstituted. "They are coming after us," he said. "They want to execute attacks. You see it in Bali, you see it in Kuwait. They plan in multiple theaters of operations. They intend to strike this homeland again, and we better get about the business of putting the right structure in place as fast as we can."

Tenet said the CIA's current evaluation of al Qaeda is based on the number of attacks around the world and the number of attempts foiled.

"You must make the assumption that al Qaeda is in an execution phase and intends to strike us both here and overseas," he said. "That's unambiguous as far as I am concerned."

FBI Director Robert Mueller and National Security Agency director Air Force Lt. Gen. Michael Hayden joined Tenet before the committee. The men answered questions about the changes their agencies have made since the terror attacks on the United States.

Mueller told the senators and representatives that the CIA and the FBI are working together better. A valid concern over the year has been that America has treated its domestic intelligence and law enforcement as separate from foreign intelligence, Mueller said.

"In other words, we have a CIA that looks overseas; we have the FBI that looks within the United States," he said. That division worked in the past, he continued, but it doesn't work in countering terrorism, which floods across borders.

"So when we look at the threat against the United States now, we take into account issues such as the bombing in Bali," the director said. "That is significant with regard to the threat within the United States. We did not always do that."

Hayden noted that Tenet "declared war" on al Qaeda in 1998. "There's a big difference between George [Tenet] declaring war on al Qaeda and America declaring war on al Qaeda," he said.

"What has changed is that we are delaying, denying, disrupting and destroying portions of the al Qaeda network," he continued. "Prior to Sept. 11, time was infinite for them. It was always on their side. They could take whatever steps they needed to take in order to be secure. They can no longer do that. Things are going bump in their night now, and that puts us at a great advantage. That's the big difference."

Preventative Measures

SGLI offsets financial hardships in event of death

By Airman 1st Class Andrew Svoboda
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

As the NCOIC of the military personnel flight's customer service section, Tech. Sgt. Mark Rose knows there's no shortage of paperwork for military members to fill out. As a member of the Casualty Assistance Support Team, Rose is also aware that when tragedy occurs, the last thing family members want to worry about is how they are going to get money to cover expenses.

One of the most important forms military members may fill out is for Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance. SGLI is a military entitlement offered to alleviate unexpected financial burdens placed on dependents and relatives in the event of a premature death, whether it occurs on or off duty. For the cost of about one CD per month, military members can receive the maximum amount of life insurance, $250,000, which is on par with many commercial companies.

For example, funerals rank among the most expensive purchases many consumers will ever make. According to the Federal Trade Commission, a traditional funeral, including a casket and vault, costs about $6,000, although "extras" like flowers, obituary notices, acknowledgment cards or limousines can add thousands of dollars to the final bill. Many funerals run well over $10,000.

Unless a member suffers a service-related death, the Veterans Administration only pays up to $300 toward burial. Although all veterans are entitled to a free burial in a national cemetery and a grave marker, the family is generally still responsible for other expenses, including transportation to the cemetery.

Senior Master Sgt. Eddie Gilder, 8th Maintenance Squadron first sergeant, has worked directly with two deaths in his seven years as a shirt. Fortunately, in both cases, the airmen had the maximum coverage.

"One airman was single with no dependents. The other person was a technical sergeant with a wife and two children," he said. "[In both cases] the money sure made a huge difference. Money is no compensation for loss of life, but it allows peace of mind when a family is trying to pick up the pieces of their life."

If airmen think full coverage isn't important because they aren't married, they should realize that money can go to anyone important in their life, said Master Sgt. Angie Maldonado, 8th Maintenance Operations Squadron first sergeant.

"Half the money can go to a spouse, half can go to parents, that's all up to what the member specifies," Maldonado said. "If an airman didn't have coverage, but still had a car payment, whoever inherits their estate will inherit their debt."

"Troops think they're saving money, but in the long run, it's nowhere near as important as what's given to the people left behind," added Gilder.

FINAL RESPECTS: Servicemember's Group Life Insurance can help cover the cost of funerals, as well as pay outstanding debts military member may owe. The Veterans Administration only pays up to $300 toward burial, although average funerals cost approximately $6,000.

"Other times, airmen get married and never have the coverage changed. Then we don't find out until it's too late."

Participation in the SGLI program is voluntary, but initial enrollment is automatic for military members. All active-duty troops receive an automatic enrollment with the maximum amount of coverage at a monthly premium cost of $20. This flat rate is generally uncommon with commercial insurance companies.

Many commercial companies offer different rates based on an applicant's profile. Companies generate profiles through questions including age, sex, whether the applicant has a high-risk occupation and may even require applicants to undergo a medical exam to learn their state of health.

"Initially, lower rates may be available through some commercial companies," said Rose. "Over time, these companies increase their cost and lower the amount of the policy."

Life insurance can be beneficial to not only married military members, but single members as well. Besides replacing the income families would need to maintain their standard of living after the death of a wage earner, beneficiaries use life insurance to pay off mortgage loans and other personal and business debts.

SGLI is also available to military spouses and children through a family coverage plan. The spouse coverage is available in $10,000 increments and cannot exceed the amount of coverage the military member carries, up to $100,000. If military members hold any amount of SGLI, then their children receive a free $10,000 enrollment.

Since SGLI is term insurance, it doesn't have cash or loan values and it doesn't pay dividends, but beneficiaries receive a tax exemption when collecting proceeds.

The beneficiary receives the amount for which the member was insured either in one lump sum or in 36 installments. The interest portion included in these installments is also tax exempt. In addition, delayed settlement interest (interest accrued from the date of the insured's death to the date of settlement) is also tax exempt. This means that beneficiaries aren't required to report to the Internal Revenue Service any installment interest or delayed settlement interest received in addition to the proceeds.

Upon separation from the service, military members may convert their coverage to a Veterans' Group Life Insurance policy or to a participating commercial company. The policies are issued at the standard premium rate regardless of a member's health, however policies cannot be issued for a greater amount of coverage than the member carried with SGLI. The policies provide life insurance, but no disability or other supplemental benefits.

Whether a member is new to the Air Force or about to retire, single or married, the incentives and availability of the SGLI program give servicemembers every opportunity to own maximum life insurance coverage.

For more information about SGLI, visit the military personnel flight customer service desk.

for many years, that he must allow U.N. weapons inspectors in "a strong new inspection regime" and that there will be consequences if Hussein doesn't comply.

Any U.N. resolution must not hinder the United States' right to act with other like-minded nations if Hussein makes it clear he is not going to cooperate, Powell said.

Powell also explained the current status of the so-called Agreed Framework of 1994, in which North Korea promised the United States it would not develop nuclear weapons.

North Korean representatives said the agreement was nullified when they admitted to developing such weapons, Powell said. "When you have an agreement and one says it's nullified, it looks like it's nullified," he said on the ABC news program "This Week with George Stephanopoulos."

He said the matter is one for "multilateral consideration." U.S. officials will be discussing the issue with leaders of other countries in the region, he said.

OF THE PRIDE PACK

Job: 8th Fighter Wing protocol office

Duties: Provide policy and procedural guidance to senior leadership concerning proper protocol requirements for visiting dignitaries, military ceremonies, conferences, official meetings and briefings

Hometown: Butler, Mo.

Follow-on: Ramstein Air Base, Germany

Hobbies: Shopping, especially online since moving to Kunsan

Favorite music: Everything — R and B, country, rock, but right now I'm listening to Dave Matthews Band

Last good movie you saw: All-time favorite movie — Top Gun

Best thing you've done at Kunsan: Spending the weekend in commando warrior tents at Osan with the cops.

Senior Airman Crystal Berry

Job: 8th Fighter Wing protocol office

Duties: Provide policy and procedural guidance to senior leadership concerning proper protocol requirements for visiting dignitaries, military ceremonies, conferences, official meetings and briefings

Hometown: Peoria, Ill.

Follow-on: Pope Air Force Base, N.C.

Hobbies: Camping and hiking with my family. I've hiked different parts of the Appalachian Trail.

Favorite music: Eric Clapton, Bob Seger and Kenny Chesney
Last good movie you saw: Lord of the Rings — three hours and no ending!

Best thing you've done at Kunsan: Toured Seoul and visited the Seoul Tower when my wife came to visit. Very cool, could see the entire city from up there.

Master Sgt. Charles Lewis

"Senior Airman Berry and Master Sgt. Lewis have performed outstanding work acting as the ambassadors of the wing, greeting more than 30 distinguished guest visits in the past three months including Gen. LaPorte, USFK commander; Gen. Hornburg, ACC commander and Lt. Gen. Smith, the 7th Air Force commander. Their pride and dedication helps the wing and entire base shine."

Recipe for Success

By Master Sgt. Mark Haviland
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

Tech. Sgt. Shelli Fisher is prowling the kitchen. Like a field general from some 19th Century army, her eyes take in everything under her command. There's a frenzy of activity swirling around her – people scrubbing pots and pans, cutting meat and vegetables by hand, and shuffling trays of food from oven to serving line.

She watches the action with a critical eye, helping where she can, offering advice, giving direction and making a thousand mental notes. For the second time today, her troops are in the middle of a pitched battle – it's lunchtime at Kunsan's O'Malley Inn dining facility, and a million things can go wrong.

It can be a shortage of carryout trays or cups, or even forks. Some days, a vendor may not be able to supply ketchup packets or syrup. It might be a delay on the serving line – any number of things can unleash the wrath of customers and turn a good day into a bad day almost instantly. No matter where she goes, that thought is never far from the 31-year-old facility manager.

As if on cue, Fisher knows it's time to abandon the constant motion of the kitchen's culinary ballet. She takes a breath and pushes through the heavy double doors that lead to the serving area – the "trenches" of the O'Malley Inn battlefield.

The survey is a quick one. She flashes a smile at her troops, shares a joke or two, checks the line and gauges the mood of the customers. Soon, she'll head out to the dining area and check to make sure the customers are happy.

She's been on her feet since just after 4 a.m., and she shows no signs of slowing down.

"I think the troops appreciate it when management is out there working with them and helping where they can," said Fisher, who must motivate her troops to prepare four meals a day, seven days a week. It's a daunting prospect. During their one-year tour with the Wolf Pack, they'll serve a grand total of about 2,628,000 customers.

It's almost a love-hate relationship, a sad reality of any customer-service organization. For the food service troops at Kunsan, who try to make the most out of a repetitive Air Force-wide menu and who literally slave away in a hot kitchen for the two to three hours it takes to prepare a meal, customers can be a source of pride or ridicule.

"You'll never satisfy all the customers all the time," said Staff Sgt. Andrew Gunter, who manages the Charlie-Pad, a smaller dining facility on Kunsan's flightline.

But that doesn't mean they don't try. Both Fisher and Gunter regularly poll their customers and both respond directly to complaints left on facility comment cards.

"Between answering comment cards and talking to customers in the facility, I spend about three hours a day dealing with customer issues," said Fisher. "You get to meet a lot of people."

But the comments aren't always bad and talking with the customers can often be rewarding, according to Tech. Sgt. Lynn Caraveo, the O'Malley's assistant manager.

"The one good comment, where they really let you know how good things are, that makes it all worth it," said Caraveo. "That's what I love about food service."

That positive attitude is everywhere in food service, from 1st Lt. Lisa Moreno, the squadron's food service officer, to Airman 1st Class Rebecca Blanchard, the O'Malley's newest arrival.

"Everybody gets along and there are always smiles, it's a fun atmosphere," said Blanchard. "It makes you want to get up and come to work each day."

About an hour after the lunchtime crowd departs, the military members of the staff file into the dining area for Fisher's last scheduled official act of her shift, a staff meeting. The conversation is serious, but often punctuated with laughter – a reflection of the atmosphere in the kitchen.

Soon, the staff will wage war again for dinner, then the midnight meal and then the cycle starts all over again with breakfast. It's a never-ending struggle against time, resources and the fickle tastes of their customers, and few outside the walls of the O'Malley have any idea what it's like.

But none of that matters to the staff — they know their recipe for success is the main course that sustains every mission at Kunsan.

Airman 1st Class Rebecca Blanchard readies a pan of lemon baked fish during lunch. The O'Malley Inn staff prepares food throughout each meal, a process known as "progressive cooking," to ensure customers get freshly cooked items. Almost 1,800 airmen eat at Kunsan's dining facility each day.

Tech. Sgt. Shelli Fisher, dining facility manager, discusses an issue with Tech. Sgt. William Stiley, 8th Civil Engineer Squadron.

Mr. Hon, a cook at the O'Malley Inn, prepares fast food items for the Wolf Pack.

Staff Sgt. Alicia Cust, NCOIC of the O'Malley Inn's storeroom, takes advantage of a quiet moment to complete some paperwork. Cust stocks the items needed for each day's meals, including 45 dozen eggs and 25 gallons of milk.

Varsity squads head to tournament

STRETCH: Shelli Fisher, shoots a jumper during a Lady Wolf Pack practice. The team travels to Osan Friday.

The Kunsan men's and women's varsity basketball teams kick off the start of the 2002-03 season with the Osan Pre-Season Tournament this weekend at Osan.

It's not only a chance for the teams to play some basketball, but an also opportunity to get a first-hand look at the competition before the regular season starts next week.

Thomas Jones, the Kunsan men's coach, said the Wolf Pack will look to "out athlete" the other teams this season.

"We're well conditioned," Jones said. "We're not that big. We have a couple of guys 6-4 and 6-5, but they're slender built.

We hope to make up for that with a lot of athletic ability. We work hard on fundamentals, especially defense and blocking out. People who have come out to watch us practice are impressed with what we can do. I think we look pretty strong. We're looking forward to the season starting."

Lady Wolf Pack coach V.I. Tyrell said her team has a lot of potential if it can avoid the injury bug.

"We'll do fairly well," Tyrell said. "We have the potential to be PACAF champions. We have better ball handling on our team than last year. And we have more players than last season, so our numbers are pretty good. We just need to stay healthy. We've had a lot of injuries on the team. We also have high turnaround and mid-tours to worry about. We just need our healthy bodies to stay healthy."

Jones has an acronym for his team, which could actually be applied to both the Kunsan men and women.

"H.A.R.D. is acronym our team has adopted," Jones said. "It stands for heart, attitude, respect and dedication. We have to have heart — we have to want to play. We have to have a positive attitude, no matter what happens. Respect on and off the court. And finally, we have to be dedicated to the team."

CES crumbles SFS-B 13-6

By Senior Airman Chuck Walker
8th Communications Squadron

The Red Devils utilized good defense by picking off three passes, two by safety Therman Watkins and got some timely offense to hold off the 8th Security Forces "B" team 13-6 Wednesday.

With the victory, CES moves to 8-1 on the season and remains in second place in the intramural standings.

Coach/quarterback Scott Butler said the defense was key to the victory against the Bad Boys.

"Our defense won the game for us," Butler said. "Our defense completely stopped their offense. We got good pressure up front and our defensive backs just laid back and they were able to pick off some passes."

Watkins, who grabbed two of the interceptions, said smart play and hustle added to the defense's performance.

After the Red Devils held the Bad Boys to a three-and-out on its first series, they went to work. Butler hit Rozell Foster on a 24-yard touchdown strike to give CE a 7-0 lead.

A big play from its special teams set up CES's second score.

Running back Amir Winslow looked like he was bringing a SFS "B" punt back to the house, before he was knocked out of bounds by the Bad Boys, a penalty, setting up the Red Devils at the 5-yard line.

Two plays later, Butler ran in from three yards out to give the Red Devils a 13-0 lead.

"That run [Winslow] got, that was the back breaker," Butler said.

Winslow had 54 yards rushing, including 45 on the big punt return.

The Bad Boys got on the board late when quarterback Chad Reavis hit receiver Tim Cook on a 25-yard touchdown, but it was too little, too late.

SFS "B" coach Arthur Bloomingdale said the Bad Boys got going offensively too late.

This is something he said the team hopes to correct down the stretch.

Jeonju pre-schoolers, ages four to seven, make their way to an F-16 and ROKAF F-5 static display during a base tour Oct. 18. The 74 children, along with their teachers and many of their parents, also visited the Kunsan Fire Department and saw a fire truck display, learned the importance of emergency phone numbers, how to 'stop, drop and roll,' and met "Rusty" the fire dog. Their tour of Kunsan wrapped up after they ate their sack lunches and played some Korean and American games on the football field. Some of the games, included Tóo Ho (a game much like horseshoes), Frisbee, soccer and croquet.
